

COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIRST DISTRICT OF TEXAS

Ivan Lopez-Lopez v. The State of Texas

No. 01-24-00408-CR (Tex. App.—Houston [1st Dist.] Mar. 31, 2026) · No. 01-24-00408-CR · Decided March 31, 2026

SUMMARY

The Texas Court of Appeals for the First District affirmed Ivan Lopez-Lopez’s conviction for continuous sexual abuse of a child and forty-year sentence. The court held that the complainant’s testimony, viewed in the light most favorable to the verdict, was sufficient to support the conviction and declined to revisit the jury’s credibility determinations.

PRACTICE AREAS

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether the evidence was legally sufficient to support Lopez-Lopez's conviction for continuous sexual abuse of a child when the appellant challenged the complainant's credibility and the differing levels of detail in her disclosures.

HOLDINGS

1. The evidence was legally sufficient because the complainant testified that, while Lopez-Lopez was over seventeen, he committed multiple acts of sexual abuse against her while she was under fourteen during a period exceeding thirty days.
2. The complainant's testimony was not rendered legally insufficient by differing levels of disclosure or by the quantity of abuse described; credibility and the weight of the testimony were matters for the jury.

KEY QUOTATIONS

"We may not reevaluate the weight and credibility of the evidence." (at 2)

"The jury is the sole judge of witness credibility and the weight to be given testimony." (at 2)

"We decline the appellant's invitation to revisit the jury's credibility determinations." (at 4)

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

The complainant testified that Lopez-Lopez began sexually abusing her when she was eleven years old, including an incident involving sexual intercourse. She further testified that, beginning when she was twelve, he sexually abused her approximately twice a week for two or three years at the family's Fort Bend County trailer. Although she initially disclosed the abuse without details, she later provided a more complete account to her boyfriend and mother, who reported it to police.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

A jury convicted Lopez-Lopez of continuous sexual abuse of a child and assessed punishment at forty years' confinement. He appealed to the First Court of Appeals, raising one point of error concerning the sufficiency of the evidence. The court overruled the point and affirmed the trial court's judgment.

DISPOSITION

affirmed

NO. 01-24-00408-CR

IVAN LOPEZ-LOPEZ, Appellant V. THE STATE OF TEXAS, Appellee On Appeal from the 458th District Court Fort Bend County, Texas Trial Court Case 21-DCR-095036A

MEMORANDUM OPINION

A jury convicted the appellant of continuous sexual abuse of a child and assessed punishment at forty years' confinement. The appellant raises one point of error challenging the sufficiency of the evidence to support his conviction. We affirm. Background The appellant married Yolanda's¹ mother when Yolanda was in elementary school. The appellant began sexually abusing Yolanda when she was eleven. Yolanda testified that the first time was when the family was staying with Yolanda's uncle in Joaquin, Texas. The appellant woke her up in the middle of the night, took her into the bathroom, and locked the door. He touched her breasts and vagina, then he penetrated her vagina with his penis. Afterward he told her to stay quiet and go back to sleep. Yolanda testified that when she was twelve the appellant began abusing her in the trailer where the family lived in Fort Bend County. He did it a couple of times per week for two or three years. The pattern was consistent: He would pull her by the arm into the bedroom, take off his pants and her pants, and touch her "in the same areas, penetrating [her] again." Yolanda testified that when she was fifteen she told the appellant to stop molesting her. The physical abuse stopped, but the appellant continued to comment on her appearance "in a sexual dirty way." ¹ The complainant is identified by a pseudonym in the indictment and throughout the record. See TEX. CODE CRIM. PROC. art. 58.102 (allowing victims of sexual offenses to be identified by pseudonym throughout judicial proceedings). ² Yolanda testified she disclosed the abuse to a few people without giving details, but when she was 19 years old she finally gave details to her boyfriend. Then she told her mother of the abuse. Her mother reported the abuse to the police. Sufficiency In a single point of error the appellant claims the evidence is insufficient to support his conviction because, he claims, Yolanda was not credible: "No rational juror could have believed the complainant in this case." This is so, the appellant claims, because Yolanda disclosed different types and levels of abuse at different points of the investigation, and because the amount of abuse she disclosed was not believable. On sufficiency review we must view the evidence in the light most favorable to the verdict, determining only whether any rational trier of fact could have found the essential elements of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt. See Brooks v. State, 323 S.W.3d 893, 899 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010). We may not reevaluate the weight and credibility of the evidence. Williams v. State, 235 S.W.3d 742, 750 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007); see Brooks, 323 S.W.3d at 899 (reviewing court may not sit as “thirteenth juror,” disagree with the jury’s “weighing of the evidence,” or “disagree with a jury’s resolution of conflicting evidence”). The jury is the sole judge of witness credibility and the weight to be given testimony. Garcia v. State, 367 S.W.3d 683, 687 (Tex. Crim. App. 2012). The testimony of the victim, alone, can support a 3 conviction for continuous sexual abuse of a child. TEX. CODE CRIM. PROC. art. 38.07(a), (b)(1); Wishert v. State, 654 S.W.3d 317, 328 (Tex. App.—Eastland 2022, pet. ref’d); Fernandez v. State, No. 01-21-00541-CR, 2023 WL 3742350, at *7 (Tex. App.—Houston [1st Dist.] June 1, 2023, no pet.) (mem. op., not designated for publication). To sustain a conviction for continuous sexual abuse of a child, the evidence must show that, while the appellant was at least 17 years old, and during a period that was 30 or more days in duration, the appellant committed two or more acts of sexual abuse against a child under the age of 14. TEX. PENAL CODE § 21.02(b). The Penal Code has an expansive list of offenses that count as “act[s] of sexual abuse,” but the indictment in this case narrowed the State’s theories of liability by specifying two: aggravated sexual assault of a child and indecency with a child by contact, if committed in a manner other than by touching the child’s breast. Yolanda testified the appellant had sexual intercourse with her once when she was eleven, and twice a week for three years beginning when she was twelve. Yolanda and her mother both testified the appellant was over 17 years old at the time of the sexual assaults. That is sufficient to support the conviction. The appellant argues Yolanda’s testimony was not credible because of the quantity of acts of sexual abuse she testified to. The appellant provides no authority suggesting that a rational factfinder cannot believe testimony that an offense 4 happened a lot. Such a rule would create perverse results, acquitting habitual assailants because they were habitual assailants. The appellant also claims Yolanda’s testimony was not credible because she divulged more information at trial than she had told police at the beginning of the investigation. The appellant provides no authority for the proposition that this makes Yolanda’s testimony so incredible no rational factfinder could believe it. The lack of authority here is notable because a complainant disclosing different levels of abuse at different points of an investigation is an ordinary occurrence in child sexual assault prosecutions. See, e.g., Lopez v. State, No. 01-23-00948-CR, 2025 WL 1256452, at *2 (Tex. App.—Houston [1st Dist.] May 1, 2025, pet. ref’d) (mem. op., not designated for publication) (noting that complainant made “partial disclosure” to investigators but made more complete disclosure a year later to prosecutors). Witnesses in this case testified to as much, and the jury made its credibility finding in light of that evidence. We decline the appellant’s invitation to revisit the jury’s credibility determinations. We overrule his sole point of error. 5 Conclusion We affirm the trial court court’s judgment.
