QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether substantial evidence supported Moore's conviction for domestic abuse assault with a dangerous weapon.
2. Whether the appellate court should reweigh conflicting testimony and reassess the credibility of the eyewitnesses and alleged victim in reviewing the sufficiency of the evidence.

HOLDINGS

1. Substantial evidence supported the jury's finding that Moore committed domestic abuse assault with a dangerous weapon, and the conviction was affirmed.
2. The appellate court may not reweigh evidence, resolve conflicts in testimony, or second-guess the jury's credibility determinations when reviewing the sufficiency of the evidence.

KEY QUOTATIONS

““In reviewing the sufficiency of the evidence, we are highly deferential to the jury’s verdict,” and we are bound by it “if it is supported by substantial evidence.”” (at 2)

““The jury is the sole arbiter of witness credibility,” not us.” (at 3)

““In considering a challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence, it is not the province of the court to resolve conflicts in the evidence, to pass upon the credibility of witnesses, to determine the plausibility of explanations, or to weigh the evidence; such matters are for the jury.”” (at 3)

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

On March 13, 2024, Destanne Campbell saw a woman, later identified as N.C., in a ditch waving and screaming for help while Moore chased her. Campbell returned with her mother, Leslie, and the two saw a Jeep swerve at N.C. and nearly hit her. N.C. appeared scared, shaking, and crying, identified Moore as the person who chased her and swerved at her, and provided an initial statement to police, but at trial she denied Moore's involvement and claimed police questioning led her to make the earlier statements.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Following a brief jury trial in the Iowa District Court for Tama County, Moore was found guilty of domestic abuse assault with a dangerous weapon. He appealed, arguing that the eyewitnesses lacked credibility and that the alleged victim's trial testimony supported his general denial. The Iowa Court of Appeals affirmed.

DISPOSITION
