

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS

Mahoney-Buntzman v. Buntzman

12 N.Y.3d 415, 909 N.E.2d 62 (2009) · Decided May 7, 2009

SUMMARY

The New York Court of Appeals addresses equitable distribution issues in a divorce action, holding that the wife was not entitled to credits for marital payments toward the husband's maintenance obligation to his first wife or his student loan. The court also upheld the trial court's valuation of the husband's stock and options as of the trial date and classified settlement proceeds reported as business income on joint tax returns as marital property. The order was modified and remitted for further proceedings.

CASE DETAILS

COURT	New York Court of Appeals
WRITING FOR THE COURT	Pigott, J.; Ciparick, J.; Graffeo, J.; Read, J.; Smith, J.; Jones, J.; Lippman, C.J.
JURISDICTION	New York
DECIDED	May 7, 2009
DISPOSITION	reversed_and_remanded
PROCEDURAL POSTURE	Plaintiff wife appealed an equitable-distribution judgment in a divorce action. The Appellate Division awarded her credits for marital funds used to pay defendant husband's maintenance obligation to his first wife and student loan. The New York Court of Appeals granted leave and modified the Appellate Division's order.
STANDARD OF REVIEW	Equitable-distribution determinations are reviewed for abuse of discretion; the trial court has broad discretion and substantial flexibility in fashioning an equitable distribution of marital property and liabilities.

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether plaintiff wife was entitled to an equitable-distribution credit for marital funds used to pay defendant husband's court-ordered maintenance obligation to his first wife.
2. Whether plaintiff was entitled to an equitable-distribution credit for payments made during the marriage toward defendant's student loan.
3. Whether the trial court properly valued the EVCI stock and options as of the date of trial.
4. Whether defendant was estopped from asserting that settlement proceeds were separate-property stock-sale proceeds after reporting them as business income on the parties' joint income-tax return.

HOLDINGS

1. A spouse is not ordinarily entitled to recoupment or an equitable-distribution credit for marital funds used during the marriage to pay the other spouse's maintenance obligation to a former spouse. Such payments do not constitute liabilities entitled to recoupment absent circumstances such as wasteful dissipation or another expressly applicable equitable factor.
2. Plaintiff was not entitled to a credit for payments made during the marriage toward husband's student loan because the loan was incurred and fully paid during the marriage and was therefore a marital obligation to be shared by the parties.
3. The trial court providently exercised its discretion by using the date of trial to value the EVCI stock and options.
4. A party may not take a litigation position contrary to the position represented under penalty of perjury on an income-tax return; defendant was therefore properly estopped from characterizing the $1.8 million settlement proceeds as separate-property stock-sale proceeds after reporting them as business income.

KEY QUOTATIONS

“Courts should not second-guess the economic decisions made during the course of a marriage, but rather should equitably distribute the assets and obligations remaining once the relationship is at an end.” (421)

“We cannot, as a matter of policy, permit parties to assert positions in legal proceedings that are contrary to declarations made under the penalty of perjury on income tax returns.” (422-423)

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

The parties married in 1993 and had two daughters. During the marriage, husband paid maintenance owed to his first wife and repaid a student loan incurred to obtain a doctorate; wife sought a 50% equitable-distribution credit for both categories of payments. Husband also received $1.8 million during the marriage under an agreement concerning his interests in two corporations, reported the payment as business income on the parties' joint tax return, and later argued that it was proceeds from the sale of stock and therefore separate property. The trial court valued marital EVCI stock and options as of trial, classified the $1.8 million as marital property, and denied the requested maintenance and student-loan credits.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Supreme Court, Westchester County, granted plaintiff a divorce and distributed the parties' marital assets and liabilities. The Appellate Division modified the judgment to award plaintiff a 50% credit for maintenance payments to defendant's former wife and a 50% credit for payments on defendant's student loan, and otherwise affirmed. The Court of Appeals modified by rejecting those credits and remitting for further proceedings consistent with its opinion.

DISPOSITION

reversed_and_remanded

REMAND INSTRUCTIONS

Remit to Supreme Court for further proceedings in accordance with the Court of Appeals' opinion; the Appellate Division's order was modified without costs and, as modified, affirmed.

OPINION

Mahoney-Buntzman v. Buntzman 12 N.Y.3d 415

PIGOTT, J.

OPINION OF THE COURT

Pigott, J. In this divorce action, we are asked to resolve several equitable distribution issues. For the reasons that follow, we hold that plaintiff wife is not entitled to a 50% credit for payments made during the marriage towards defendant's maintenance obligation to his first wife nor for payments made towards husband's student loan, and thus we modify. The parties were married in

New York on September 24, 1993 and have two daughters. Wife has an adult child from a previous relationship. Husband was married once before, and has two adult children from that marriage. Pursuant to a divorce judgment, husband was obligated to pay his first wife maintenance. During the present marriage, husband and another individual formed Educational Video Conferencing Inc. (EVCI), a New York corporation that went public in 1999. At the time of the instant action, husband owned a number of shares and options of EVCI stock, all of which were acquired during marriage. Prior to his marriage to plaintiff, husband had an interest in Arol Development Corporation (ADC), a real estate development company he founded with his father in 1971. In 1983, husband founded another company, Big Apple Industrial Buildings, Inc., 80% of which he sold to ADC in 1989. In 1998, *419husband entered into an agreement with his father whereby he agreed to relinquish his stock ownership in both corporations in exchange for a lump sum payment. The agreement provided that the payment would be reported on a "1099" form issued to him by the purchasing company. In order to account for the increased tax liability that husband would incur as a consequence of treating the payment as ordinary income rather than as a sale of stock, the payment was increased by 17%. This money, amounting to $1.8 million, was received by husband during the marriage and reported on the parties' joint income tax return as self-employment business income. In May 1996, husband obtained a doctorate in education from Fordham University for which he had taken out a student loan that was repaid two years later. On May 19, 2003, wife commenced the instant divorce action and an 18-day trial ensued. Supreme Court granted wife a divorce on the grounds of abandonment and in a detailed decision, dated October 3, 2006, considered and distributed the various assets and debts of the parties' marriage (13 Misc 3d 1216[A], 2006 NY Slip Op 51852[U] [Sup Ct, Westchester County 2006]). As it pertained to the EVCI stock and options, the court found that husband played a substantial role in changing the direction of the company and in its expansion. Nevertheless, the court rejected husband's claims that the appreciation in the value of the EVCI stock was due solely to his efforts, holding that there were significant contributions of others to the operations of EVCI and no evidence directly linking the increase in the value of its stock solely to husband. Consequently, the court used the date of trial for valuation purposes of the EVCI stock and options. With respect to maintenance paid by husband to his first wife during the marriage, the court declined to give wife credit for one half of that amount. The court noted that both parties had used marital assets to assist other relatives. For instance, wife had used marital sums to provide support for her daughter and her father. The court stated "neither party may be heard to complain about the other's use of marital funds to pay for their own obligations or to aid other family members, when that approach was evidently an accepted part of their lifestyle" (2006 NY Slip Op 51852[U] at *70). For the same reasons, the court declined to give wife a credit for monies used to repay the student loan. *420Supreme Court further held that husband is estopped from arguing that the funds received from the sale of his corporate interests to his father were proceeds from the sale of stock and thus, separate property, because he had reported the funds as business income on the parties' joint tax returns. The court also noted that in his 1993 judgment of divorce from his first wife, husband represented that he owned no stock at the time. On appeal, the Appellate Division modified the judgment of Supreme Court by, among other things, holding that wife was entitled to an equitable distribution credit of one half of the amount of court-ordered maintenance paid by husband to his former wife from marital funds (51 AD3d 732 [2008]). The court held that the maintenance obligation to his first wife constituted debt incurred by him prior to the parties' marriage and is therefore his sole responsibility. The Appellate Division also awarded wife a 50% credit—or $24,081.45—for the student debt incurred by husband during the marriage to attain his degree, concluding that because a court-appointed expert had determined that husband's advanced degree did not enhance his earnings, wife received no benefit from it, and therefore, the student loan was incurred to satisfy husband's separate property interest making the loan his sole obligation. As modified, the Appellate Division affirmed. We granted leave (11 NY3d 706 [2008]) and now modify the order of the Appellate Division. The Domestic Relations Law recognizes that the marriage relationship is an economic partnership. As such, during the life of a marriage spouses share in both its profits and losses. When the marriage comes to an end, courts are required to equitably distribute not only the assets remaining from the marriage, but also the liabilities. A trial court considering the factors set forth in the Domestic Relations Law has broad discretion in deciding what is equitable under all of the circumstances. Indeed, when it comes to the equitable distribution of marital property, Domestic Relations Law § 236 (B) (5) (d) (13) authorizes the trial court to take into account "any other factor which the court shall expressly find to be just and proper." Consequently, the trial court has substantial flexibility in fashioning an appropriate decree based on what it views to be fair and equitable under the circumstances. However, during the life of any marriage, many payments are made, whether of debts old or new, or simply current expenses. *421If courts were to consider financial activities that occur and end during the course of a marriage, the result would be parties to a marriage seeking review of every debit and credit incurred. As a general rule, where the payments are made before either party is anticipating the end of the marriage, and there is no fraud or concealment, courts should not look back and try to compensate for the fact that the net effect of the payments may, in some cases, have resulted in the reduction of marital assets. Nor should courts attempt to adjust for the fact that payments out of separate property may have benefitted both parties, or even the nontitled spouse exclusively. The parties' choice of how to spend funds during the course of the marriage should ordinarily be respected. Courts should not second-guess the economic decisions made during the course of a marriage, but rather should equitably distribute the assets and obligations remaining once the relationship is at an end. With this holding in mind, we review the four issues raised on this appeal. Prior Maintenance In this case, wife seeks to recoup money that was expended during the marriage to pay husband's obligation to his former spouse for maintenance. We hold that wife is not entitled to such recoupment. Expenditures made during the life of the marriage towards maintenance to a former spouse, as well as payments made pursuant to a child support order, are obligations that do not enure solely to the benefit of one spouse. Payments made to a former spouse and/or children of an earlier marriage, even if made pursuant to court order, are not the type of liabilities entitled to recoupment. This is not to say that every expenditure of marital funds during the course of the marriage may not be considered in an equitable distribution calculation. Domestic Relations Law § 236 (B) (5) (d) (13) expressly and broadly authorizes the trial court to take into account “any other factor which the court shall expressly find to be just and proper” in determining an equitable distribution of marital property. There may be circumstances where equity requires a credit to one spouse for marital property used to pay off the separate debt of one spouse or add to the value of one spouse’s separate property (see e.g. Micha v Micha, 213 AD2d 956, 957-958 [3d Dept 1995]; Carney v Carney, 202 AD2d 907 [3d Dept 1994]). Further, to the extent that expenditures are truly excessive, the ability of one party to claim that the other has accomplished a “wasteful dissipation of *422assets” (Domestic Relations Law § 236 [B] [5] [d] [11]) by his or her expenditures provides protection. The payment of maintenance to a former spouse, however, does not fall under either of these categories. Student Loan Nor is wife entitled to a credit for payments made during the marriage towards husband’s student loan. Husband incurred the student loan during the parties’ marriage, and had his degree conferred an economic benefit, wife would have been entitled to a share in its value (see O’Brien v O’Brien, 66 NY2d 576 [1985]). Thus, the loan, which was both incurred and fully paid for during the marriage, was a marital obligation for which responsibility was to be shared between the parties.* EVCI Stock We further hold that the trial court providently exercised its discretion by setting the valuation date for the EVCI stock and options as the date of trial (see generally McSparron v McSparron, 87 NY2d 275 [1995]). Estoppel Similarly, the trial court properly exercised its discretion when it classified the money received by husband pursuant to the settlement agreement as marital property, given the fact that husband made representations that the money was business income for tax purposes. A party to litigation may not take a position contrary to a position taken in an income tax return (see Meyer v Insurance Co. of Am., 1998 WL 709854, 1998 US Dist LEXIS 15863 [SD NY 1998]; Naghavi v New York Life Ins. Co., 260 AD2d 252 [1st Dept 1999]; Zemel v Horowitz, 11 Misc 3d 1058[A], 2006 NY Slip Op 50276[U], *5 [Sup Ct, NY County 2006]). Here, husband does not dispute that, in accordance with his settlement agreement, he reported the $1,800,000 in settlement proceeds as business income on his federal income tax return, in which he swore that the representations contained within it were true. We cannot, as a matter of policy, permit parties to assert positions in legal proceedings that are contrary to declarations made under the penalty of perjury on income tax returns. *423Accordingly, the order of the Appellate Division should be modified, without costs, by remitting to Supreme Court for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion and, as so modified, affirmed. Judges Ciparick, Graffeo, Read, Smith and Jones concur; Chief Judge Lippman taking no part. Order modified, etc. If the student loan debt was still outstanding, however, it may have been appropriate for the trial court to conclude that defendant alone was required to bear the obligation of repayment of the balance of his student loan.
