PRACTICE AREAS

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether ACS proved by a preponderance of the evidence that the mother neglected the child under Family Court Act § 1012(f)(i)(A).
2. Whether the evidence established that the child's physical, mental, or emotional condition was impaired or in imminent danger of impairment because the mother failed to provide adequate food, clothing, or shelter despite being financially able to do so or being offered reasonable means to do so.

HOLDINGS

1. In a neglect proceeding under Family Court Act article 10, the petitioner must prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the child was neglected.
2. A neglect finding requires proof that the child's physical, mental, or emotional condition was impaired or in imminent danger of impairment because the parent failed to exercise a minimum degree of care in supplying adequate food, clothing, or shelter, although financially able to do so or offered financial or other reasonable means to do so.

KEY QUOTATIONS

“Actual or imminent danger of impairment is a “prerequisite to a finding of neglect [which] ensures that the Family Court, in deciding whether to authorize state intervention, will focus on serious harm or potential harm to the child, not just on what might be deemed undesirable parental behavior”” (at 1-2)

““Imminent danger . . . must be near or impending, not merely possible”” (at 2)

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

The mother cared appropriately for the newborn while they were together in a Brooklyn hospital. Hospital personnel contacted ACS after learning that the mother had only public-assistance income and could not return with the child to the home where the maternal grandmother was staying. ACS removed the child on an emergency basis but did not provide the mother with housing information, emergency-housing information, or supplies for the child.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

ACS filed a child-neglect petition four days after the mother gave birth. Following a fact-finding hearing, the Family Court, Kings County, found that the mother neglected the child. The Appellate Division reversed on the facts, denied the petition, and dismissed the proceeding.

DISPOSITION

reversed

REMAND INSTRUCTIONS

No remand was ordered. The order was reversed, the petition was denied, and the proceeding was dismissed.
