

SUPREME COURT OF GEORGIA

Young v. State, 290 Ga. 441

721 S.E.2d 839 (2012) · No. S11A1296 · Decided January 9, 2012

SUMMARY

The Supreme Court of Georgia affirmed Kareem K. Young's convictions for felony murder and related offenses arising from the shooting death of his cousin. The court rejected his Brady claims concerning a police department management report and an unidentified child witness, upheld admission of a prior convenience-store homicide as a similar transaction, and found no error in limiting cross-examination of a police officer or denying a jury view.

CASE DETAILS

COURT	Supreme Court of Georgia
WRITING FOR THE COURT	Thompson, Justice; All the Justices
JURISDICTION	Georgia
DECIDED	January 9, 2012
DOCKET	S11A1296
DISPOSITION	affirmed
PROCEDURAL POSTURE	Direct appeal from convictions for felony murder and related offenses following a jury trial.
STANDARD OF REVIEW	The sufficiency of the evidence was reviewed under whether any rational trier of fact could find guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. The trial court's evidentiary rulings, limitation of cross-examination, and denial of a jury view were reviewed for abuse of discretion.
PRECEDENTIAL VALUE	Published opinion; precedential decision of the Supreme Court of Georgia.
PARTIES	Kareem K. Young v. The State

TOPICS

criminal procedure evidence appellate procedure sixth amendment hearsay

PRACTICE AREAS

criminal law criminal procedure evidence appellate procedure constitutional law

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether the evidence was sufficient to support Young's convictions.
2. Whether the State violated Brady v. Maryland by failing to disclose a management report concerning the Garden City Police Department.
3. Whether the State violated Brady by refusing to identify a child witness whose statement had been reviewed in camera.
4. Whether evidence of the 2004 convenience-store homicide was admissible as a similar transaction.
5. Whether the trial court violated Young's confrontation rights or otherwise abused its discretion by limiting cross-examination of Officer Nollinger concerning possible bias.
6. Whether the trial court abused its discretion by denying a jury view of the crime scene.

HOLDINGS

1. The evidence was sufficient for a rational trier of fact to find Young guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of the offenses for which he was convicted.
2. The undisclosed management report was not Brady material because it was neither exculpatory nor impeaching and was not material to the outcome of the trial.
3. The State's failure to identify the witness did not violate Brady because Young knew before trial that the State had obtained the witness's statements, and an in-camera review showed that the statement was not exculpatory.
4. The trial court properly admitted evidence of the 2004 convenience-store homicide as a similar transaction because the prosecution established a sufficient connection among Young, the handgun, and both crimes.
5. The trial court did not abuse its discretion by limiting cross-examination of Officer Nollinger about possible pressure arising from criminal and disciplinary proceedings against him.
6. The trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying a jury view because the trial evidence, including video, diagrams, and photographs, enabled the jury to understand the crime scene and issues.

KEY QUOTATIONS

"To prevail on a Brady claim, appellant must demonstrate that the prosecution wilfully or inadvertently suppressed evidence favorable to the accused, either because it is exculpatory or impeaching." (842)

"The Confrontation Clause guarantees only an opportunity for effective cross-examination, not cross-examination that is effective in whatever way, and to whatever extent, the defense might wish." (843)

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

Young shot his cousin, Arkeem Lavan Young, in the head outside their home and then called 911. Physical evidence, including shell-casing location, blood spatter, gunpowder residue, and recovery of the murder weapon from under the house, contradicted Young's account that a passing truck fired the shot. Ballistics connected the handgun to both the victim's death and an earlier convenience-store homicide for which Young had been a suspect. Young challenged the convictions based on alleged Brady violations, admission of the earlier homicide as a similar transaction, limits on cross-examination of a police officer, and denial of a jury view.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Young was indicted for malice murder, two counts of felony murder, possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony, theft by receiving stolen property, tampering with evidence, and making false statements. After trial, the jury acquitted him of malice murder but convicted him of the remaining charges. The trial court imposed a life sentence for felony murder predicated on aggravated assault and additional concurrent or consecutive sentences as applicable. The trial court denied Young's motion for new trial, and he appealed to the Supreme Court of Georgia, which affirmed.

DISPOSITION

affirmed

CASES CITED

- Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 87 (1963)
- Kyles v. Whitley, 514 U.S. 419, 436-437 (1995)
- United States v. Bagley, 473 U.S. 667, 682 (1985)
- Wood v. Bartholomew, 516 U.S. 1 (1995)
- Jackson v. Virginia, 443 U.S. 307, 318-319 (1979)
- Vega v. State, 285 Ga. 32, 33, 673 S.E.2d 223 (2009)
- Young v. State, 281 Ga. 750, 642 S.E.2d 806 (2007)
- Watkins v. State, 276 Ga. 578, 582, 581 S.E.2d 23 (2003)
- Sapp v. State, 263 Ga. App. 122, 587 S.E.2d 267 (2003)
- Sutton v. State, 237 Ga. 418, 419(3), 228 S.E.2d 815 (1976)
- Esposito v. State, 273 Ga. 183, 187(4), 538 S.E.2d 55 (2000)
- Malcolm v. State, 263 Ga. 369, 434 S.E.2d 479 (1993)

OPINION

Young v. State 721 S.E.2d 839

THOMPSON, J.

721 S.E.2d 839 (2012)

290 Ga. 441

YOUNG

v. The STATE. No. S11A1296. Supreme Court of Georgia. January 9, 2012. Reconsideration Denied February 6, 2012.

*841 Jennifer R. Burns, Savannah, for appellant.

Ann McNellis Elmore, Asst. Dist. Atty., Spencer Lawton, Jr., District Attorney, Paula Khristian

Smith, Senior Assistant Attorney General, Samuel S. Olens, Attorney General, Department of Law, for appellee. THOMPSON, Justice. Appellant Kareem K. Young was convicted of felony murder and other offenses in connection with the death of Arkeem Lavan Young.[1] He appeals, asserting, inter alia, the prosecution withheld exculpatory evidence in violation of Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 83 S. Ct. 1194, 10 L. Ed. 2d 215 (1963). Finding no error, we affirm.

1. Viewing the evidence in a light to uphold the verdict, we find the following: Appellant and a cousin, Arkeem Young, were standing in the driveway of their home around midnight. Arkeem was using a cell phone when appellant shot him in the head, picked up the cell phone, and dialed 911. Officer Nollinger was just six houses away when the 911 call was made and he arrived quickly at the scene. Arkeem was lying on the ground with one leg folded underneath him. His eyes were wide open, but he was dead.

Appellant told police his name was "Hakeem" and he spelled it. He said he was standing with his cousin in the driveway; that they turned to walk toward the house; that a shot rang out as a black truck rode past the house; and that he ran and hid behind a garbage can. Officer Nollinger did not see a truck in the neighborhood. Appellant's next-door neighbor heard the shot, but he did not hear the sound of a passing truck. Police searched the scene and found a shell casing near the victim. The location of the shell casing, along with blood splatter evidence, demonstrated that the shot had not been fired from the street. That finding was consistent with evidence showing that appellant had gunpowder residue on his hands. Initially, police were unable to find a weapon at the house. Two days later, however, they recovered a handgun from under the house. The gun was stolen. A ballistics test demonstrated that it was used to kill Arkeem; it also showed that it was used to kill an armed robbery victim at a convenience store seven months earlier. Appellant was a suspect in the convenience store shooting. He told police who investigated that shooting *842 that he was at the convenience store and he was carrying a shotgun, but that he did not shoot the victim. The evidence was sufficient to enable any rational trier of fact to find appellant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of the crimes for which he was convicted. See Jackson v. Virginia, 443 U.S. 307, 318-319, 99 S. Ct. 2781, 61 L. Ed. 2d 560 (1979). See also Vega v. State, 285 Ga. 32, 33, 673 S.E.2d 223 (2009).

2. Appellant contends the State violated Brady because it failed to disclose a 19-page management report detailing the findings of a private consulting company hired by the Mayor of Garden City to investigate the operations of the Garden City Police Department.[2] In this regard, appellant claims the report shows that the lead investigator, Steve Stratman, who found the murder weapon and testified at trial, had a reputation for falsifying reports and lying under oath. Continuing the argument, appellant posits that the report could have been used to impeach Stratman about his recovery of the murder weapon.

To prevail on a Brady claim, appellant must demonstrate that the prosecution wilfully or inadvertently suppressed evidence favorable to the accused, either because it is exculpatory or impeaching. Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. at 87, 83 S. Ct. 1194. However, "the Constitution is not violated every time the government fails or chooses not to disclose evidence that might prove helpful to the defense." Kyles v. Whitley, 514 U.S. 419, 436-437, 115 S. Ct. 1555, 131 L. Ed. 2d 490 (1995). Brady comes into play only when the suppressed evidence is material, i.e., "only if there is a reasonable probability that, had the evidence been disclosed to the defense, the result of the proceeding would have been different. A 'reasonable probability' is a probability sufficient to undermine confidence in the outcome." United States v. Bagley, 473 U.S. 667, 682, 105 S. Ct. 3375, 87 L. Ed. 2d 481 (1985). The management report at issue here is not material; it is neither exculpatory nor impeaching. The report never identifies any cases by name, and never names any of the interviewees. It contains no specific information from identifiable sources which appellant could present to a jury. Simply put, the report does not raise a reasonable probability that, had it been disclosed, the outcome of the trial would have been different. United States v. Bagley, supra. Because the report was hearsay and inadmissible, and appellant has not shown how its disclosure would have led to admissible evidence, it did not constitute Brady material. See Wood v. Bartholomew, 516 U.S. 1, 116 S. Ct. 7, 133 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1995).

3. Appellant asserts the State also violated Brady because it refused to identify a witness who placed appellant at the scene of the convenience store shooting. This assertion is without merit. Appellant was aware pretrial that the State had taken statements from the witness, a six-year-old child. The trial court reviewed the witness' statement in camera, and ruled that it was not at all exculpatory. We have also reviewed the witness' statement in camera and find no error in the trial court's ruling.

4. The trial court did not err in admitting evidence of the 2004 convenience store homicide as a similar transaction. This Court held on interlocutory appeal that such evidence would be admissible if there was a sufficient connection between the gun, each of the two crimes, and appellant. Young v. State, 281 Ga. 750, 642 S.E.2d 806 (2007). The prosecution satisfied these requirements. It demonstrated that appellant was at the scene of each crime; that the handgun used to kill the victim in the convenience store robbery was used to kill Arkeem; that appellant stored the handgun at his house; and that he retrieved it the day Arkeem was murdered.

5. Officer Nollinger, who was the first to arrive at the scene, subsequently *843 joined a police force in South Carolina where he was indicted for official misconduct and his South Carolina POST certification was revoked. At the time of trial, Nollinger was facing a disciplinary hearing in Georgia to determine if his Georgia POST certification should have been revoked also. Appellant contends that, inasmuch as Nollinger may have felt pressured to testify favorably for the State in order to gain concessions from the South Carolina prosecutor or keep his Georgia POST certification, the trial court should have permitted him to cross-examine Nollinger about any possible bias. We disagree.

The Confrontation Clause guarantees only an opportunity for effective cross-examination, not cross-examination that is effective in whatever way, and to whatever extent, the defense might wish. Accordingly, trial courts retain wide latitude insofar as the Confrontation Clause is concerned to impose reasonable limits on cross-examination based on concerns about, among other things, harassment, prejudice, confusion of the issues, the witness' safety, or interrogation that is repetitive or only marginally relevant. (Citations, punctuation and emphasis omitted.) Watkins v. State, 276 Ga. 578, 582, 581 S.E.2d 23 (2003). In denying defendant's motion to explore Nollinger's bias, the trial court informed appellant it would revisit the issue if appellant were to present evidence other than the pending criminal charge against Nollinger. However, appellant failed to demonstrate that Nollinger's testimony was influenced in any way by the charge pending against him in South Carolina. In fact, the South Carolina prosecutor testified that Nollinger did not seek any concessions for his cooperation and that she had no interest whatsoever in Nollinger's trial testimony. Moreover, Nollinger's testimony was consistent with his police report, the dashboard videotape he made at the scene, and the testimony of other officers. Thus, it would be highly speculative to suggest a connection between Nollinger's testimony and the troubles stemming from the South Carolina prosecution, and it cannot be said that the trial court abused its discretion in limiting appellant's cross-examination of Nollinger. Compare Watkins v. State, supra, 276 Ga. at 580(3), 581 S.E.2d 23 with Sapp v. State, 263 Ga.App. 122, 587 S.E.2d 267 (2003).

6. The trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying a jury view. Sutton v. State, 237 Ga. 418, 419(3), 228 S.E.2d 815 (1976). The evidence introduced at trial, including video, diagrams and photographs, enabled the jury to comprehend fully the scene of the crime and the issues pertaining thereto. A view would have provided "fertile ground for irregularity" and no real benefit. See Esposito v. State, 273 Ga. 183, 187(4), 538 S.E.2d 55 (2000).

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

NOTES

[1] The crimes occurred on July 20, 2005. Via indictment, appellant was charged with malice murder, two counts of felony murder (one predicated on aggravated assault, the other on theft by receiving stolen property), possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony, theft by receiving stolen property (the murder weapon), tampering with evidence, and making false statements. Trial commenced on January 28, 2008, and concluded on February 4. The jury found appellant not guilty of malice murder, and guilty on the remaining counts. The trial court sentenced appellant to life in prison on the felony murder count predicated on aggravated assault, and a consecutive term of five years on the possession of a firearm count. The other felony murder count was vacated by operation of law. See Malcolm v. State, 263 Ga. 369, 434 S.E.2d 479 (1993). The trial court sentenced appellant to terms of imprisonment on the remaining counts which are to be served concurrently with the life sentence for felony murder. Appellant's timely filed motion for new trial was denied on January 24, 2011, and appellant filed a notice of appeal on February 1. The case was docketed in the September term of this Court and orally argued on September 12, 2011.

[2] Appellant received the report pursuant to an open records request made after trial.

