

SUPREME COURT OF GEORGIA

Murray v. State

Murray v. State · No. S21A1098 · Decided November 23, 2021

SUMMARY

The Supreme Court of Georgia vacated an order denying Andrew Murray’s amended motion for new trial and remanded for consideration of the motion’s merits. The court held that the trial court could not deny or dismiss the motion solely because Murray presented no additional evidence at the hearing or failed to appear, although those circumstances could waive the right to a hearing. The court also disapproved prior authority to the extent it permitted dismissal of a motion for new trial on that basis.

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether a trial court may deny or dismiss a motion for new trial on the ground that the defendant failed to present additional evidence at the hearing when some claims can be decided from the existing trial record.
2. Whether a defendant's failure to appear at or participate in a scheduled motion-for-new-trial hearing permits the trial court to dismiss the motion without considering its merits.
3. Whether Scott v. State and Mimms v. State correctly permitted dismissal of a motion for new trial based on failure to appear at the hearing.

HOLDINGS

1. A trial court may not deny the merits of all claims in an amended motion for new trial merely because the defendant presented no additional evidence at the hearing when some claims can be resolved from the existing trial record.
2. A defendant's failure to request or attend a motion-for-new-trial hearing may waive the right to a hearing and the opportunity to expand the record, but it does not waive the right to have the motion decided on its merits based on the existing record.
3. Scott v. State is disapproved insofar as it held that dismissal of a motion for new trial is proper when defense counsel fails to appear for the hearing. Mimms v. State is disapproved to the extent it indicates that dismissal based on failure to appear may be proper.

KEY QUOTATIONS

“If a defendant does not request a hearing or does not appear at a scheduled hearing, he may waive his right to a hearing and the opportunity to expand the record, but that does not waive his right to have the merits of his motion for new trial considered and decided by the trial court based on the existing record.” (11-12)

“Accordingly, Scott’s holding on this point is hereby disapproved, as is Mimms’s holding to the extent it indicates that dismissal of a motion for new trial based on a failure to appear at a hearing on the motion may be proper.” (14)

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

Murray was convicted by a jury of malice murder and numerous additional crimes arising from the shooting death of Paul Sampleton, Jr., and received consecutive life and term-of-years sentences. During extended motion-for-new-trial proceedings, Murray rejected or sought withdrawal of three appointed attorneys and ultimately proceeded pro se. At the final hearing, he claimed to be an attorney-in-fact named Billy Drew Bey and asserted that he was not present as Murray, leading the trial court to deny the amended motion for new trial without addressing its merits.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

After a jury convicted Murray of malice murder and other crimes, he filed a motion for new trial that was amended through several changes of counsel and pro se filings. The trial court ultimately denied the amended motion, characterizing the order as a dismissal, because Murray appeared at the hearing while claiming to be a different person and did not provide additional support. The Supreme Court of Georgia vacated the order and remanded for consideration of the motion's merits.

DISPOSITION

REMAND INSTRUCTIONS

The trial court must consider and decide the merits of Murray's amended motion for new trial, using the existing record and any properly developed evidence as appropriate.
