QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether the trial court erred in denying the former wife's petition for relocation.
2. Whether the trial court improperly denied equitable distribution of the marital residence as a sanction for the former wife's unsuccessful challenge to the validity of the marriage.

HOLDINGS

1. The trial court's denial of the former wife's relocation petition was proper because its evaluation of the statutory relocation and best-interests factors was supported by competent, substantial evidence.
2. The trial court erred by denying equitable distribution of the marital residence because that ruling imposed an impermissible sanction on the former wife for previously contesting the validity of the marriage without success.

KEY QUOTATIONS

“However, we are constrained to reverse that aspect of the judgment denying equitable distribution of the marital home because the ruling amounts to an impermissible sanction levied on the former wife for previously contesting the validity of the marriage to no avail.” (2)

“In judicial proceedings, a party simply is not estopped from asserting a later inconsistent position . . . unless the party’s initial position was successfully maintained.” (2)

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

The parties were formerly married, and the former wife sought relocation. The trial court denied relocation and awarded the marital residence in toto to the former husband, while the former wife had previously contested the validity of the marriage without success.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

The Circuit Court for Miami-Dade County entered a final judgment of dissolution that denied the former wife's relocation petition and denied her equitable distribution of the marital residence. The former wife appealed. The Third District Court of Appeal summarily affirmed the relocation ruling, reversed the ruling concerning equitable distribution of the marital home, and remanded.

DISPOSITION

reversed_and_remanded

REMAND INSTRUCTIONS

Remand for further proceedings concerning equitable distribution of the marital residence consistent with the opinion; the denial of relocation remains affirmed.
