QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. What procedure should be followed when an appellant's brief has not been filed and the appellate court must determine whether the appellant wishes to prosecute the appeal and whether counsel has abandoned the representation?
2. What measures are required if the appellant is indigent, including whether new counsel should be appointed?

HOLDINGS

1. The trial court must conduct a hearing and make findings and recommendations regarding why appellant's brief has not been filed, whether appellant desires to prosecute the appeals, whether appellant is indigent, and, if not indigent, whether retained counsel has abandoned the appeals.
2. If appellant is indigent, the trial court must take measures necessary to assure effective representation, which may include appointing new counsel.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

Appellant's briefs had not been filed in eight criminal appeals. The appellate court directed the trial court to determine why the briefs were missing, whether appellant wished to prosecute the appeals, whether she was indigent, and whether retained counsel had abandoned the appeals.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Jackson appealed from the 283rd Judicial District Court of Dallas County in eight criminal cases. Because appellant's brief had not been filed, the court ordered the trial court to conduct a hearing concerning the status of the appeals, appellant's indigency, and possible abandonment by retained counsel, and abated the appeals pending receipt of findings and recommendations.

DISPOSITION

remanded

REMAND INSTRUCTIONS

The trial court was ordered to conduct a hearing, make appropriate findings and recommendations, determine whether appellant wished to prosecute the appeals, determine whether appellant was indigent, and determine whether retained counsel had abandoned the appeals if appellant was not indigent. If appellant was indigent, the trial court was ordered to take measures necessary to assure effective representation, potentially including appointment of new counsel. If appellant could not be present, the hearing was to proceed in her absence. The trial court was ordered to transmit the record, including written findings and recommendations, within thirty days. The appeals were abated and scheduled for reinstatement thirty days after the order or upon receipt of the findings, whichever occurred first.
