

SUPREME COURT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, APPELLATE DIVISION, FIRST DEPARTMENT

Matter of Park Row 23 Owners LLC v. Jiha

2026 NY Slip Op 00586 · No. Index No. 157547/19; Appeal No. 5742; Case No. 2024-05569 · Decided February 5, 2026

SUMMARY

The Appellate Division, First Department affirmed the denial of a CPLR article 78 petition challenging the New York City Department of Finance's determination that the petitioner's property was ineligible for Industrial and Commercial Abatement Program benefits. The court held that the Department's interpretation of the statutory term "building or structure" was reasonable and rejected the petitioner's equitable estoppel argument.

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether DOF reasonably interpreted the term "building or structure" in RPTL 489-bbbbbb(3)(f)(iii)(a) to refer to an entire building rather than only the commercial portion or individual tax lots.
2. Whether DOF should be equitably estopped from denying the petitioner's ICAP application based on communications from a DOF representative.

HOLDINGS

1. DOF's interpretation of "building or structure" in RPTL 489-bbbbbb(3)(f)(iii)(a) as referring to an entire building was reasonable and therefore could not be disturbed.
2. DOF was not equitably estopped from denying the ICAP application because estoppel may not be used to ratify administrative error, particularly where a sophisticated party could have discovered through reasonable due diligence that the representative's communications were not reliable.

KEY QUOTATIONS

"An exemption from taxation must clearly appear, and the party claiming it must be able to point to some provision of law plainly giving the exemption" ([*1])

"[petitioner]'s interpretation of the statute must not simply be plausible, it must be the only reasonable construction" ([*1])

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

Park Row 23 Owners LLC sought Industrial and Commercial Abatement Program benefits for real property. The New York City Department of Finance determined that the property did not satisfy the special eligibility requirement in RPTL 489-bbbbbb(3)(f)(iii)(a), interpreting "building or structure" to refer to an entire building rather than only its commercial portion or individual tax lots. The petitioner also relied on communications from a DOF representative and argued that the agency should be equitably estopped from denying the application.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

The New York City Department of Finance determined that Park Row 23 Owners LLC's real property was not eligible for ICAP benefits. Supreme Court, New York County, denied the petition to vacate or annul that determination and dismissed the CPLR article 78 proceeding. The Appellate Division, First Department, unanimously affirmed without costs.

DISPOSITION

affirmed
