

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

Giraldes v. Roche

357 F. App'x 885 (9th Cir. 2009) · Decided December 14, 2009

SUMMARY

The Ninth Circuit affirmed in part, vacated in part, and remanded a prisoner's 42 U.S.C. § 1983 action alleging First Amendment retaliation and Eighth Amendment deliberate indifference to medical needs. The court upheld summary judgment on claims concerning the plaintiff's knee condition and pain management but remanded claims involving gastrointestinal disease, dumping syndrome, and retaliation for consideration of evidence that treatment decisions may have been medically unacceptable or retaliatory. The court also upheld the denial of appointed counsel.

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether summary judgment was proper on Giraldes's Eighth Amendment claims concerning his knee condition and need for pain management.
2. Whether the evidence submitted by Giraldes created a triable issue on his Eighth Amendment claims concerning gastrointestinal disease and dumping syndrome.
3. Whether the evidence submitted by Giraldes created a triable issue on his First Amendment retaliation claims.
4. Whether the district court abused its discretion by denying Giraldes's motions for appointment of counsel.

HOLDINGS

1. Summary judgment was properly granted because Giraldes failed to raise a triable issue that defendants' chosen course of treatment was medically unacceptable under the circumstances.
2. Summary judgment was vacated because the district court did not address whether Giraldes's evidence created a triable issue that defendants refused medically appropriate treatment for retaliatory reasons.
3. Summary judgment was vacated and the claims were remanded because the district court did not consider whether Giraldes's evidence raised a triable issue of retaliation.
4. The district court did not abuse its discretion in denying Giraldes's motions for appointment of counsel because he failed to demonstrate exceptional circumstances.

KEY QUOTATIONS

“Because the district court’s order is silent regarding the evidence submitted in opposition to summary judgment, we vacate the judgment with respect to the Eighth Amendment claims concerning Giraldes’s gastrointestinal disease and dumping syndrome, and the First Amendment retaliation claims, and remand for the district court to consider in the first instance whether that evidence raises a triable issue.” (357 F. App’x at 886)

“The district court did not abuse its discretion by denying Giraldes’s motions for appointment of counsel because, at that stage of proceedings, Giraldes failed to demonstrate “exceptional circumstances” warranting appointment of counsel.” (357 F. App’x at 886)

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

Giraldes alleged that prison medical defendants were deliberately indifferent to his medical conditions and retaliated against him for filing a prior lawsuit by refusing to follow a specialist's recommended course of treatment. He submitted medical records, a sworn declaration, and deposition testimony in opposition to summary judgment. His medical claims concerned, among other conditions, a knee condition, pain management, gastrointestinal disease, and dumping syndrome.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

The district court granted summary judgment for defendants on Giraldes's claims and denied his motions for appointment of counsel. The Ninth Circuit affirmed summary judgment on the Eighth Amendment claims concerning Giraldes's knee condition and pain management, vacated summary judgment on the Eighth Amendment claims concerning gastrointestinal disease and dumping syndrome and on the First Amendment retaliation claims, and remanded for further proceedings.

REMAND INSTRUCTIONS

The district court was directed to consider in the first instance whether Giraldes's evidence raised a triable issue on the Eighth Amendment claims concerning gastrointestinal disease and dumping syndrome and on the First Amendment retaliation claims. The parties were to bear their own costs on appeal.
