QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. What initial partial appellate filing fee should be assessed when the plaintiff fails to provide the requested prison account statement?
2. Whether $8.20 was a reasonable initial partial appellate filing fee based on the available account information.

HOLDINGS

1. Because Plaintiff did not provide the requested updated prison account statement, the court could calculate the initial partial appellate filing fee using the available information; $8.20 was a reasonable amount.

KEY QUOTATIONS

“it shall calculate the initial appellate partial filing fee at $35 or such other reasonable amount warranted by available information.”

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

The Eighth Circuit remanded the case for calculation and collection of Plaintiff's appellate filing fee. Plaintiff did not provide the updated six-month prison account statement requested by the district court. The district court had previously calculated an initial partial filing fee of $8.20 based on a prison account statement Plaintiff filed on February 3, 2025.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

The Eighth Circuit remanded the matter for calculation and collection of the appellate filing fee pursuant to Henderson v. Norris. The district court had previously ordered Plaintiff to submit an updated six-month prison account statement, but he did not do so. Using the $8.20 initial partial filing fee previously calculated from Plaintiff's February 3, 2025 prison account statement, the court ordered Plaintiff to pay $8.20 toward the appellate filing fee within 30 days.
