QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether the Intermediate Court of Appeals had jurisdiction to review Lucas's motion for further relief from the remand order and to direct the Civil Service Commission to withdraw its petition and determine its own jurisdiction.

HOLDINGS

1. The Intermediate Court of Appeals lacked jurisdiction to review Lucas's motion for further relief and therefore dismissed the motion.

KEY QUOTATIONS

“it appears we do not have jurisdiction to review the Motion.” (2)

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

Sanya Lucas filed a motion requesting further relief from a remand order. She also asked the court to direct the Civil Service Commission to withdraw its petition to the Hawai‘i Labor Relations Board and determine its own jurisdiction. The Intermediate Court of Appeals considered the motion, the supporting and opposing papers, and the record.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

The matter arose from an appeal from the Circuit Court of the Second Circuit, Civil No. 2CCV-XX-XXXXXXX. After a remand order, Sanya Lucas filed a motion for further relief in the Intermediate Court of Appeals. The court concluded that it lacked jurisdiction to review the motion and dismissed it.
